Links While out on the lake it gets its random spirts, it will start fine but when you try to get it to full throttle it will either bog down or die, then it wont start at all sometimes or it does. The guy before me, rebuilt the carbs, I went through them and they seem fine. I have put in new fuel lines to replace the grey crappy ones. I have put in a new DESS post and got 2 new keys programmed to the new DESS post. I have replaced the gauges with newused gauges. I have redone the seat and put in a new head cushion. Have you load tested the battery. Check all connections on battery cables both ends. I know the positive lead goes into the starter box, where does the ground go do you know I would think that would be fine right The negative cale goes directly from the battery to the underside of the starter. Is there supposed to be another wire on the end of the ignition coil. I followed this video to do my wiring test Also noticed I could easily take out the engine temperature wire is it supposed to be like this. Sorry, I am new to this do not know all the ins and outs yet. Could it be the starter.

The starter relay seems to be fine as well. Thank you for the help! Only one side of the coil needs to be grounded. The temp sensor wire is damaged and has pulled out of its connector crimping. Like this link Could that have been part of the issue. I will redo the temp sensor, but would that cause a starting problem. Do you think it could be the starter When I pulled them off and looked into them they were pretty clean and looked like the brand new parts as well. I'll redo the wiring this weekend and give an update for it I'll follow the guides you posted. Thank you for your help! When I pulled them off and looked into them they were pretty clean and looked like the brand new parts as well. Thank you for your help! I used SBT OEM carb kits, ski started, ran fine on the trailer.but the ski fell flat on its face in the water though. Redid everything with Mikuni carb kits.much JOY! The ski came back with a vengeance. Solve your electric issues.then tackle the carbs.IMHO! He did mess with the screws but when I took the carbs off I readjusted them to the manual spec and have adjusted the idle screw to make it to 3000 rpms while on the trailer. So would the starter be the next thing to fix, if its not the wiring or are you guys pretty sure its the wiring. Yeah, thats my plan is to tune the carbs once I can figure out this weird situation in the water. I know you said it was new, but we have heard this from others here and the new battery was the issue. I'm not saying that is going to be the case here, but it is a very easy test. That's how I got the 442 cranking amps number. What happened was I went in with the old battery and had them load test it, and it was only giving 150 cranking amps this new one the Duracell ultra gave 442 cranking amps under the same load. Correct me if I'm wrong, I am new to this so I do not know a whole lot on what to do after wiring. Correct me if I'm wrong, I am new to this so I do not know a whole lot on what to do after wiring.

That's a good idea okay I'll take out the starter tomorrow and head up there with it. Thanks for the info. I will also be doing the wiring this weekend. That's a good idea okay I'll take out the starter tomorrow and head up there with it. I will also be doing the wiring this weekend.They should be able to pull the PN from your starter and be able to do the test. They should be able to pull the PN from your starter and be able to do the test.Is it in the manual. Ill look for it right now.
